Xenophanes (ENTP): Xenophanes roamed the intellectual landscape, wielding wit to challenge convention. He mocked the gods of Homer as mere human projections—bearded and bickering—proposing instead a single, abstract divine force. A restless observer, he critiqued society’s follies with a provocateur’s glee, from religious dogma to poetic excess. His broad gaze also turned to nature, speculating on fossils and the earth’s vast history. Xenophanes delighted in shaking up settled beliefs, urging others to question what they took for granted. His philosophy blended skepticism with a vision of a unified cosmos, free of petty human distortions, making him a trailblazer for rational thought and open-ended exploration.
